

Harvard University

Assistant Radiation Protection Officer

Duties

Under the direction of Radiation Safety Officer, the Assistant RPO manages operational services of radiation program and supervises field activities of technicians in providing laboratory surveys, waste management; provides technical and engineering assistance to promote compliance with radiation related regulations, permits and university policy. The Assistant RPO ensures the program is implemented in compliance with applicable regulations and good practice guidelines in accordance with commitments to affiliated institutions.

Requirements

Masters of Science in radiological sciences or equivalent and five years experience with the field operational aspects of a university/institutional/commercial broad scope, by-product radioactive materials license are required. Certification in health physics is preferred. Experience in radiation protection program management and supervising professional and technical staff is preferred. Candidate must possess a strong working knowledge of radiation safety and transportation regulations, and MA DPH, NRC, and DOT regulations. Must take initiative, be organized, able to manage multiple priorities work independently and as part of a team. Strong interpersonal and excellent verbal and written communication skills with attention to detail are required. Must be skilled in the use and development of computer databases and other software. Must possess excellent time management and organizational abilities. Candidate is required to participate in 24-hour emergency response activities.

The successful candidate will complete pre-employment drug, reference & background screening as well as the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's Trustworthiness and Reliability requirements.

Apply on line at: <http://employment.harvard.edu/> Requisition No.21249BR.

For information ONLY about this position (do not send resumes or applications), please contact:

Joseph P. Ring, Ph.D., CHP

Radiation Safety Officer

Telephone: 617 495-8795

FAX: 617 496-5509

Email: Joseph_ring@harvard.edu